A View Of Quincy: 212 Feet Above City

New Wollaston Station Opens

By SCOTT JACKSON

The new, state-of-the-art Wollaston MBTA station is now open, 20 months after it closed for renovations.

The station opened anew the morning of Aug. 16. It had been closed since January 2018, when the MBTA began its $36 million project to renovate the Red Line stop.

Wollaston station first opened in 1971 and had been the only station on the Red Line that was not in compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act. The new station complies with those requirements and includes three new elevators and accessible bathrooms.

"Wollaston has been transformed into a modern, fully accessible transit facility, making the entirety of the Red Line 100-percent accessible," MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo said.

Other features include two new escalators, two additional stairways and new pedestrian paths to, from, and inside the new station, including a new pedestrian bridge, and two new sets of fare gates to help reduce lines in the station. New electrical, fire protection, security, flooding mitigation, and site utility upgrades will also occur to support the accessible improvements.

Zoning Change Sought In HN

By SCOTT JACKSON

A proposal now pending before the City Council would rezone Sea Street in Houghs Neck from business to residential to stop multi-family developments from coming to the area.

Ward 1 Councillor David McCarthy introduced the zoning change in June and said the council could sign off on the proposal when it reconvenes in September. He is also eyeing zoning changes in parts of Adams Shore, Quincy Center and Quincy Point.

Most of Houghs Neck from the intersection of Sea and Babcock Streets east to Nut Island is zoned Residential A, which only allows single-family homes by-right. Parts of Sea Street between Manet Avenue and Brill Field are zoned Business B, however, where multi-family development is allowed.

McCarthy's proposal would rezone those areas to Residential A. Existing businesses could remain in MICHAEL SALVADOR, Jr. is a union crane operator for G & C Concrete Construction, a sub-contractor for general contractor Lee Kennedy erecting the 15-story Chestnut Place development at the site of the former Hancock Municipal Parking Lot. Here Salvador pauses at the work site on recent early morning before climbing the 212-foot crane and working a 9-to-10 hour shift. The concrete structure is on schedule to be completed by mid to late-October.

Crane Worker 'On Top Of The World' In Quincy

212-Feet Above The Chestnut Place Development

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

Michael Salvador, Jr. drives about 40 miles to get to his job in Quincy.

But his commute really starts when he gets here.

Salvador, age 47, is the crane operator for G & C Concrete, the Haverhill-based company erecting the concrete shell for the Chestnut Place development on a portion of the former Hancock Municipal Parking Lot in Quincy Center. G & C is a subcontractor for the project's general contractor, Lee Kennedy.

Once complete, the 15-story, $80 million, 100 percent union project will be the highest building in Quincy and South Shore region. It will stand roughly double the height as the nearby iconic Granite Trust Building, the longtime downtown landmark.

No one has a better perspective of the blossoming Chestnut Place as it continues to reach skyward with each passing week than Salvador.

After he parks his car in a lot a half mile away from the construction site, the Somerset resident walks to the construction site where he prepares for the last leg of his commute. Using a series of 20-foot safety ladders, he carefully and methodically climbs the 212-foot crane rung-by-rung until he reaches his office for the day: an enclosed cab positioned atop the crane.

While climbing a structure that is nearly as high as the Bunker Hill Monument may seem daunting for most, for Salvador he takes it all in stride.

"I'm not afraid of heights so to me climbing up the crane is no different than walking down the road," he says one early morning before his ascent. "It's just something that I am used to doing. I've been doing it for 21 years now."

Salvador went through extensive training to become a certified crane operator.

"I did a four-year training program with International Union of Operating Engineers Local 4. It was a four-year apprenticeship program," he explains.

Chan's Committee Tackling Privacy, Alcohol Rules

By SCOTT JACKSON
Data privacy and the state's laws concerning alcohol sales and distribution are among the topics Rep. Tackey Chan's committee on Beacon Hill plans to address, along with the possibility of online lottery sales. Chan, a Quincy Democrat, is the House chairman of the Joint Committee on Consumer Protection and Professional Licensure. Chan has held that post since June 2017 and has served on the committee during much of his tenure in the Legislature, which started in 2012.

Daytime Lane Closures On QSD, Sea Street

Daytime lane closures on Quincy Shore Drive and Sea Street in Quincy began Monday and will continue for at least several months, Mass DOT announces.

According to Mass DOT, the impacts will occur each day from 7 a.m., through 3:30 p.m., and are necessary to allow crews and contractors to safely and effectively conduct construction operations. These operations will continue throughout the summer and fall months, and weather permitting, will continue into the winter.

The full scope of work includes excavating and placing new concrete sidewalks, and installing new conduit, traffic signals, and new curbing.

Signs, traffic control devices and law enforcement details will be used to guide drivers through the work zone. Drivers who are traveling through the impacted areas should expect delays, reduce speed, and use caution. All scheduled work is weather dependent and may be impacted due to an emergency situation.

BEAUTIFULLY INTERESTING

Diamonds are not only exquisitely beautiful, but they are also incredibly fascinating. Derived from the Greek word meaning "unbreakable," diamond is the hardest natural material in the world. The only thing that can scratch a diamond is another diamond. Because of their hardness, diamonds are used in the industrial world as cutting and polishing tools. Most natural deposits of diamonds are found in Africa, and billions of dollars worth (weighing in around fifty-seven thousand pounds) are mined every year throughout the world. The diamond is the world's most popular and sought-after gemstone. Naturally occurring diamonds take billions of years to form, and they make their way to the surface through volcanic eruptions. Because diamonds are the hardest substance known to man and their shimmering beauty is without peer, they are a true investment in the future. At Rogers Jewelry, our diamond collection contains virtually any shape and size imaginable. Our creative designs, selection of the finest gemstones, and our high degree of craftsmanship put us well ahead of the crowd. And our knowledgeable, friendly staff is standing by, always ready to help but never to interfere. When you walk through our doors at 1402 Hancock St. in Quincy Center, you will soon see what we mean. PH: 617-773-3636.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Sept. 8, 1504, one of the world's most beloved works of art, "David," by Michelangelo Buonarroti, is unveiled to the public in Florence, Italy's Piazza della Signoria. It reportedly took 40 men four days to move the 17-foot-tall, 12,000-pound marble masterpiece 1/2 mile to the site.

• On Sept. 3, 1777, the American flag is flown in battle for the first time, during a Revolutionary War skirmish in Delaware. Patriot Gen. William Maxwell ordered the stars and stripes raised as a detachment of his infantry and cavalry met an advance guard of British and Hessian troops.

• On Sept. 7, 1813, the United States gets its nickname, Uncle Sam, when a newspaper picks up on the story of Samuel Wilson, a meat packer who supplied barrels of beef to the United States Army. Wilson stamped the barrels with "U.S." for United States, but soldiers began referring to the grub as "Uncle Sam's."

• On Sept. 6, 1847, writer Henry David Thoreau moves in with Ralph Waldo Emerson in Concord, Massachusetts, after living for two years in a shack he built himself on Walden Pond. In 1854, his collection of essays, "Walden, or Life in the Woods," was published.

• On Sept. 4, 1951, President Harry Truman's speech before a conference in San Francisco becomes the first television program to be broadcast from coast to coast. It was picked up by 87 stations in 47 cities.

• On Sept. 2, 1969, America's first automatic teller machine (ATM) makes its public debut, dispensing cash to customers at Chemical Bank in Rockville Center, New York.

• On Sept. 5, 1970, U.S. forces launch the last major American operation of the war in Vietnam when the 101st Airborne Division, in coordination with the South Vietnamese army, initiates Operation Jefferson Glenn in Thua Thien Province west of Hue.

Chan said a new data privacy bill, based on one approved previously in California, is now pending before the committee. Chan said he is watching how the California law is implemented.

"We actually have an interesting data bill...based on a California privacy bill," Chan said. "California passed this monstrous digital privacy bill. The reason they did it is because they are a ballot-petition state also. In their state, if they don't pass a law before a petition is certified, it goes on a ballot, so they passed the data protection bill in six days with no review, no outside input...and put the implementation day for one year."

"We're now kind of watching to see how California responds to their broken law - and they admit it is broken. They are not shying [away] from the fact that this was done to avoid a ballot question. So, we're kind of monitoring that situation."

Chan is also watching what is happening in Washington state, where lawmakers are also considering a data privacy bill. Chan is particularly interested in what Washington does because the state is home to Amazon and Microsoft; Google has a large presence in the Evergreen State as well.

"Washington state recessed before they finished theirs," Chan said. "Why are we looking at Washington state? It's because that is a state with a lot of tech companies - Google, Amazon and Microsoft are all based in Washington state - so if there are any information and digital privacy issues, we are curious how literally the state with the most data companies in one place responds."

"We're kind of monitoring some other situations around the country before we do anything ourselves to see what is happening there. I don't anticipate doing a lot of legislation this year, but I do have us doing a lot of monitoring."

The committee is also looking at the state's regulations concerning the sale and distribution of alcohol, Chan said.

"We still have a debate regarding beer distributors versus craft brewers and the so-called ability for craft brewers to break their contracts with distributors," Chan said. "It really becomes an issue of businesses contracted with other businesses to do business and while everybody wants their alcohol, no one really thinks about how it gets there."

"The industry here operates in a three-tier system - manufacturer, distributor and retail. It's been that way since prohibition," Chan added. "We have quota systems - how many licenses are allowed in each community based on population. We have strict guidelines regarding the import of alcohol and how it's done. We allow small breweries and wineries to actually self-distribute locally."

"We have a lot of issues ranging from how alcohol is distributed all the way to self-distribution all the way to the dispute about how we do quota licenses all the way to issues regarding economic-development zones versus shopping plazas. We're starting to talk about beer gardens in Boston...and one-day licenses."

He has set up two subcommittees - one to look at creating a new class of licenses for shopping malls and the other to look at one-day licenses and beer gardens.

"I created two subcommittees. I created a subcommittee for Jay Livingstone and three other guys to look at the shopping plaza, economic development issue, and I had Jon Zlotnik in his subcommittee take on the beer gardens and one-day licenses and find out what is really going on with both of them because I'm hearing stories of different kinds of abuse regarding those one-day licenses and how they are being issued," Chan said.

"It bypasses the normal system, so if you're a restaurant owner and you decided to get a liquor license and you spend in Boston $350,000 to get your license and you open your business up...and next door a beer garden opens up, pays $100 to Boston and gets to be open for 30 days because they are a beer garden, how do you feel? It shouldn't be hard for the public to figure out you wouldn't be happy, but the guys drinking the beer, do they care? Of course, they don't care, because it's not their problem, but it is a problem for those businesses. The beer gardens could threaten the businesses who went about it the right way."

Chan also noted the Supreme Court earlier this year struck down a Tennessee law that barred non-residents from obtaining retail alcohol licenses. Chan wants to see what impact that ruling has in Massachusetts.

"There is no longer a residency requirement to apply for an alcohol license," he said. "Currently you have to live in the state of Massachusetts to get an alcohol license in Massachusetts in a city or town. That is gone, so you can live in New York, come across the border and get a license. You can live in California and come to Massachusetts to get an alcohol license."

"I'm still evaluating what the impact will be in the industry, because I don't know what the impact is yet. Does it negatively impact the industry? Does it involve a whole lot of out-of-staters coming in to get licenses that they just sit on?"

Chan said his committee also has oversight over some of the state's gambling laws, such as those for horseracing. He is waiting to see if anyone comes forward with plans to open a new race track, following the end of horse racing at Suffolk Downs.

"We are waiting to see if anything pops up to fill the void in the industry in Massachusetts and whether or not that is going to happen," he said.

Chan noted the Legislature recently voted to allow simulcasting to continue through Jan. 15, 2020, and he is waiting to see if the state's two casinos seek permission for simulcasting.

"Plainridge race course is open for business today because the simulcasting law has been extended," he stated. "We're also watching to see...Encore and MGM, whether or not they want simulcast horse racing or dog racing down the road."

The committee is also considering allowing online lottery sales.

"Online lottery is one of the things that continues to be a debate in the committee level, trying to figure what is the negative impact it would have on our neighborhood stores," Chan said. "We have a high density of stores and bars with lottery products, so [if] we go online, what is the direct impact."

"They keep pointing to other states, but the penetration of lottery in [Massachusetts] is significantly higher than any state regarding accessibility at the human level, the person-to-person level, and of course stores receive extra money if there is a winning ticket at their store, which incentivizes them to not screw it up, don't do anything wrong, run a good business, and it basically keeps the cost of the lottery low because they are independent contractors."

The Supreme Court in May 2018 struck down a federal law that prohibited betting on sports in all but four states - Delaware, Montana, Nevada and Oregon. Several states have moved to legalize sports betting since that ruling, including Rhode Island.

Chan said the Legislature's economic development committee would be handling the matter of sports gambling. "The conversation continues. I do not have a timeline and I do not know what the plan looks like," Chan said. "The Legislature is in research mode."

Chan said it is too soon to say how he would vote on such a bill, because there are many different things it will have to address.

"It's such a large thing and until there is a proposal out there that has some more concreteness to it, it's hard to comment on it," Chan said. "Once the proposal comes out, I'm happy to talk about it."

Never Forget Christopher 'Chief' McCallum

READERS FORUM

We lost our friend, Christopher "Chief" McCallum, on January 28, 2019. The sudden and senseless loss of a great friend leaves you numb.

Today, we look at each other, shake our heads, and say, "We can't believe Chief is gone." We think of Chris more now than we ever did when he was with us, because the thought never crossed our minds he would be taken from us.

Chris was one of a kind.

He was generous, kind and selfless. He was the husband, father and son that others strive to be. When we get together as friends now, his absence is the first thing we notice, and it always will be.

We are proud to call Chris our best friend, and we are better men for knowing him. (There are probably too many guys out there to count who think the same thing). Today, tell your family and friends that you love them.

Lastly, when you get to where you're going remember to turn around and help the next one in line, because Chris always did.

Never forget Christopher "Chief" McCallum.

Scenes From Yesterday

QUINCY BAY, WOLLASTON, QUINCY, MASSACHUSETTS

THIS 1942 POSTCARD shows the moored floats stretching out from the Wollaston Yacht Club into Quincy Bay. All of the boats of that era were made of wood and many were homemade, especially the skiffs and small rowboats, but also many of the sailboats. There is one powerboat shown on the left here but there were not many outboard motor boats at the time. Gas rationing during World War II had pretty much curtailed its use for pleasure in anyway. In the days before marinas there were hundreds of small boats in Quincy Bay. Every night in the summer sailboat races were held by the yacht clubs. Dozens of sails can be seen in the distance here. Some of the popular classes of sailboats can be seen in the distance here. Some of the popular classes of sailboats were the Hustlers, Indians, 110s and 210s, Catboats, Thistles and Turnabouts.

Says Squantum Point Not Viable For Ferry Service

With all due respect to state Rep. Bruce Ayers, his recent formal ask of the MBTA to include surplus Squantum Point parking capacity and the just restored after two months of downtime local ferry boat service as ways to help mitigate the disruption arising from Red Line reconstruction projects is way too little too late as well as variously fraught with errata.

For starters, the original MBTA plans for the air rights development at its North Quincy station included the expectation that parking capacity lost during construction would be offset elsewhere by the private developer who won the bid to develop the air rights.

While at one point there was talk of setting up shuttle service between the one time MWRA outhaul parking lot in Squantum Point and North Quincy station, this plan quickly went away. Instead, the T inexplicably later decided to essentially as well as curiously count the residual spaces left available at Wollaston station during its reconstruction as new mitigation parking capacity.

Needless to say, the MBTA should first be tasked to explain these actions.

Next, Rep. Ayers mistakenly presents local ferry boat service as "... an economically responsible, environmentally friendly means of transit, and this area is a prime location for it."

Truth be told, ferry service is significantly more expensive for passengers. Ferry service also requires a roughly five-fold - or greater - tax money subsidy on a per passenger basis than ground-based public transit so as to keep ferry tickets from costing even more.

Additionally, not only is ferry service seasonal, local ferry service was out of service for two months this summer - and yet no reimbursement appears to on the horizon for the taxpayers who subsidized ferry service this season which did not happen.

And as for Ayers' claims that ferry service is environmentally-friendly, such is readily open to question.

For example, the roughly bus capacity sized ferry boat servicing Quincy uses gallons of diesel per mile whereas buses typically manage to travel a few miles per gallon.

Granted, commuting on a bus can entail time idling while struck in traffic; however, local ferry ridership has long averaged much less than available capacity. As such, two verities probably result in no significant net difference in their respective fuel consumption rates on a per passenger basis.

Additionally, bus diesel engines are subject to pollution standards which are far more strict than those for marine diesel engines.

Further, the reality is that Squantum Point is not a viable embarkation point for ferry service.

It is out of the way, variously inconvenient to access, and not adjacent to sufficient population density. Moreover, the Boston ferry terminal is less than convenient for commuters to then continue on to their places of employment.

In turn, is it any wonder that on a daily basis local ferry service weekday commuter round ridership has only run in but the couple to maybe several dozen range?

Even so, both Rep. Ayers generally and Quincy Mayor Tom Koch especially are also touting a plan to spend $5.2 million to remake the currently makeshift Squantum Point ferry terminal into a permanent facility as well as spend millions more on a couple of new ferry boats in addition to other millions yet at other ferry terminal sites. Such is financially irresponsible.

This plan further projects a couple orders of magnitude increase in both local and regional ferry ridership that is based on arguably koched-up, if not also utterly fanciful, assumptions.

Even more ludicrous, however, is how Mayor Koch is also the long ongoing Chair of the MBTA

Advisory Board - and yet about all he has officially proposed to address long ongoing local public transit construction woes is a woefully unrealistic and expensive plan to increase ferry service that so far has seen precious few riders as well as has to date been even more failure plagued than T service.

In all honesty, far more benefit could - for but one example - be readily be secured from an easy and low cost to develop carpooling/ridesharing phone app for use by locals who need to commute to work.

Then again, promoting the solid gold boondoggle that is ferry service out of Squantum Point surely makes for better photo ops than does opting to champion low cost, far more practical and surely greater passenger capacity enhancement programs such as a carpooling phone app.

W. Quincy Resident Requests More Police Patrols

I sent an email to Quincy Mayor Tom Koch regarding the lack of police enforcement in and around this city.

I requested that Tom Koch talk to his brother in-law Chief Paul Keenan and have some kind of enforcement in this city. I did receive an email from Koch's assistant Ms. Murphy stating that she would have Chief Keenan have his people make more patrols in and around this city.

As of this date and time, no police have been seen anywhere in this city. Remember people, our taxes are paying for the these patrol officers.

At least I am trying to get enforcement in this city.

Planning Director Defends Sea Street Incinerator Site

The position of the Quincy Planning Board in favoring a Sea Street location over Hardwick's Quarry as the site for the proposed municipal incinerator was defended by Planning Director James E. Lee in a letter to the mayor and the city council.

The Planning Board recently indicated its opposition to the Quarry Street location after a recent public hearing.

One of the chief objections of the Planning Board was that an incinerator at the Hardwick site would jeopardize "the future development of Quarry Hill."

BOY RESCUED AFTER FALL DOWN AIRSHAFT

Three-year old Richard Gregor of 160 Main St., Quincy Point, was quickly rescued unharmed after he plunged from the second story to the first floor in a furnace air-shaft. Within minutes after police and firemen arrived, a wall was ripped out and the aluminum duct in which he was trapped, was opened.

The child emerged bewildered as he saw a living room full of firemen and policemen. He managed a grin for the photographer.

Acting Lt. Lester Hazlett was in charge of the fire detail while Capt. William F. McIntyre headed the police detail.

'Twenty-One Truths About Love' – A Novel By Matthew Dicks

'The Fine Print' Book Review

By BETH VACCA

Who doesn't love a good list? Lists keep our thoughts and priorities in order. They are therapeutic. And the satisfaction felt when you are able to cross an item off a to-do list? Priceless.

Even with my love of lists, I was skeptical when I picked up the 300 plus page novel, "Twenty-One Truths About Love," by Matthew Dicks. A work written entirely in lists.

In this book of lists we meet Dan Mayrock. Dan has recently left his teaching career to pursue his dream of owning an independent bookshop (which I didn't know when I picked up this book, but what a bonus!). Dan's wife, Jill, was single when they first met only because her first husband had passed away. We learn that Jill and Dan are expecting their first child. We see their income, debts and obligations. We know what is needed at the grocery store.

What has caused this book to resonate with me is how intimate and personal

I never realized a list could be. How we come to know Dan. His fears, his struggles, his addictions to gum and Little Debbie's snack cakes. Dan's lists make him unmistakably human. He is vulnerable, likeable and highly entertaining.

A therapist had once encouraged Dan to keep a journal. Finding journaling time consuming Dan started making lists. Dan makes lists of things he needs at the store, things he needs to do, things he shouldn't do and any feeling he may be dwelling on. Through his lists we see Dan's fears and insecurities. His insecurity from leaving a secure income for the unknown. His fear of not being able to provide for a wife whom he loves and his unborn child. His insecurity from not being his wife's first husband. The loss he feels from his father's abandonment.

We see his hopes and dreams for his unborn child. All the lessons and nuggets of truth he has learned over his life. Both good and bad.

We see decisions made at desperate times and how hard it is to share our feelings even with those we love the most.

Completely unexpected by me, we get to know Dan's character in such a deep and meaningful way. Completely unexpected by our main character is how his lists help him see his insecurities in the light of day. How the lists have helped him examine his life. How, in writing, the truth has a way of coming to the surface.

I'm sure my family is hoping I don't start making more lists. Especially since I have a tendency to write lists on the closest item to me at the time including mail, school work and pizza boxes. But I just may be inspired to have my boys start making lists of their own. A lesson on who you are, what you aspire to be and the steps you need to take to get there. Nevermind the fact that it would be a great way of letting me know that you just finished the last jar of peanut butter.

I was going to share some of my favorite line items from this book, but there were just too many. Instead, I encourage you to make your own list. 1. Go to independent bookshop in October (when this book comes out). 2. Don't forget to read. 3. The Fine Print

Banana Oatmeal Cookies

By MARIE

If you like simple, easy and nutritious recipes then this recipe is for you. It is made with just two ingredients; however, if you want to add "add-ins" to this recipe you can use either ¼ cup raisins or ¼ of cup chocolate chips or ¼ cup of walnuts.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Prepare cookie sheet with parchment paper or lightly grease cookie sheet

Ingredients and Directions:

1 cup Quaker Quick Oats
2 ripe bananas - medium sized

Mash the bananas and put in bowl, add the oatmeal and blend well. This will make sticky dough that will require a little bit more oatmeal.

Now you can put in any of the add-ins, if using.

Mix until well blended and drop on to prepared cookie sheet by the spoonful.

My family likes a big cookie so when I make these cookies I use a tablespoon, but if you would like a smaller cookie use a teaspoon.

Bake 15 minutes.
Let cool.

These are a delicious snack or go well with coffee or tea.

Creamy Cauliflower Vegan Alfredo

By SUSIE

Here is an amazing recipe that a friend showed me, and she is not sure where she found it, but it is so good I just have to share.

First of all, this is dairy free and loaded with antioxidants. Brazil nuts are very high in selenium (the highest amount in any one food) and selenium helps prevent mental decline, helps boost immune system, helps to regulate thyroid, and may reduce asthma symptoms just to name a few. (halibut comes in a close second next to shiitake mushrooms).

Cauliflower is a member of the cruciferous vegetable family and is also a powerhouse of nutrition, containing a high amount of vitamin C, fiber, and B6 just to name a few. Tahini is made from ground sesame seeds and has more calcium per serving than a serving of milk (about 4 times more).

Nutritional yeast is jam packed with necessary B vitamins and is very important for vegans to add to their diet so they do not become deficient.

I am not a vegan, but choose to prepare more dairy free recipes due to their extensive health benefits, excellent taste, and a healthier digestive system in general (with no bloat and yucky tired feeling.) This is easy once you get the hang of it.

Creamy Cauliflower Vegan Alfredo

½ cup raw cashews, soaked ½ hour in boiling hot water

½ cup brazil nuts, soaked as above

A small head of cauliflower, chopped into florets - about 3 cups or so

2 small shallots, chopped

3 cloves of garlic, chopped

1 tablespoon olive oil

3 tablespoons lemon juice

1 tablespoon tahini

Sea salt and pepper

½ cup filtered water

¼ cup nutritional yeast
A handful of parsley (to garnish)
Cooked pasta (I use gluten free, and I love Jovial brand for the elbows)

Steam your cauliflower florets for 5-7 minutes, or until fork tender.

As cauliflower is steaming, sauté your garlic and shallots. Heat 1 tablespoon of olive oil over medium-low heat in a small skillet.

Add in garlic and shallots and sauté for 5 or so minutes, until garlic is fragrant and golden.

While garlic/shallots are being sautéed and the cauliflower is steaming, drain and rinse your soaked nuts. Add them to the base of a high speed blender, along with ½ cup filter water and blend on high until nuts are creamy and broken down.

Add in steamed cauliflower, garlic/shallots, tahini, lemon juice, nutritional yeast, and salt and pepper. Blend on high speed until alfredo sauce is completely creamy - about a minute or two.

Pour about a ½ cup or so alfredo sauce over your cooked pasta and stir to combine. Add in more Alfredo until you've reached the sauciness you'd like.

Gently warm noodles in pot if needed. Divide pasta into bowls and garnish with a bit of black pepper, nutritional yeast, and chopped parsley.

I also like to add in steamed broccoli florets or peas as well!

The Scoop On Your Poop

A Message From Ruth Jones, City Of Quincy Health Commissioner

By RUTH JONES
MSPH, BSN, RN,
BC, CP-FS

We all do it.

Bowel movements might not be the most appealing topic, but there's a lot to learn from this routine, yet puzzling, process. In the end (pun intended), it's merely a normal part of our body functions.

So, precisely, what is poop (a.k.a. stool, bowel movement)? It's predominantly undigested food, proteins, bacteria, salts, and other substances that are produced and discharged by intestines. While everyone is unique in the size, shape, and odor of their movement, there are factors that indicate a healthy or unhealthy bowel movement. Healthy stools can vary however there are a few general rules to follow in assessing your bowel movement for optimum health:

• Color - Brown coloring is considered normal. Bilirubin, which is a pigment compound formed from the breakdown of red blood cells in the body, gets the credit for this.

• Shape - A somewhat log-like shape is how most stools should come out due to its formation within the intestines. However, there are a variation of shapes and when they differentiate from the normal shape, that's when your bowel is trying to tell you something may be up.

• Size - Movements shouldn't come out in small pellets but instead should be a couple inches in length, comfortable and easy to pass.

• Consistency - Anywhere between a firm and soft consistency is pretty much normal. If it sways one way or another, it could suggest some digestion or fiber issues.

• Length of time it takes - A healthy movement should be easy to pass and take only a minute to expel. As a general rule, it should take no more than 10 to 15 minutes.

• Frequency - On average, a person with healthy digestion will have a movement anywhere between every other day to three times a day.

The Bristol Stool Scale is an indicator of how and why different types of movements look or feel a certain way. It's divided into seven categories and is basic and easy to understand.

Type 1

• Appearance: Hard and separate little lumps that look like nuts and are hard to pass

• Indicates: These little pellets typically mean you're constipated. It shouldn't happen frequently.

Type 2

• Appearance: Log-shaped but lumpy

• Indicates: This is another sign of constipation that shouldn't happen frequently.

Type 3

• Appearance: Log-shaped with some cracks on the surface

• Indicates: This is the gold standard of stools, especially if it's somewhat soft and easy to pass.

Type 4

• Appearance: Smooth and snake-like

• Indicates: Doctors also consider this as normal that should happen every one to three days.

Type 5

• Appearance: These are small, like the first ones, but soft and easy to pass. The blobs also have clear cut edges.

• Indicates: This type means you are lacking fiber and should find ways to add some to your diet through cereal or vegetables.

Type 6

• Appearance: Fluffy

and mushy with ragged edges.

• Indicates: This too-soft consistency could be a sign of mild diarrhea.

Type 7

• Appearance: Completely watery with no solid pieces.

• Indicates: This means your stool moved through your bowels very quickly and didn't form into a healthy movement.

As with size and consistency, a stool's color can be a helpful signal about what's going on within your body. As previously mentioned, varying shades of brown are what's considered the norm. Even a hint of green is considered healthy. But if your movement is veering toward other shades, you might want to have it checked.

• Black - If you've had licorice, iron supplements, or bismuth medications that could be the explanation behind black stool. Otherwise, black stools could be a sign of bleeding in the upper gastrointestinal tract.

• Green - Hints of green are actually rather normal. But if it turned from brown to full green, it means one of two things; either you've eaten lots of green foods like spinach, or your stools are passing through you too quickly. When it doesn't pick up as much of the brown-tinting bilirubin, it has more bile salts resulting in this color.

• Pale, white, or clay-colored - If your stool is a chalky shade, it may mean you're lacking bile. Bile is a digestive fluid that comes from your liver and gallbladder, so if you're producing white stool, it probably means your duct is blocked. Pale stools could also be a side-effect of certain medications like anti-diarrhea medicine.

• Red - Red stool can mean bleeding, either from hemorrhoids or in the lower intestinal tract. Less-serious reasons for the change in color can be from eating beets, cranberries, red gelatin, or tomato juice.

• Yellow - Greasy, yellow stool is typically a sign of too much fat. This could also be a direct relation to a malabsorption disorder like celiac disease, where your body isn't absorbing enough nutrients.

RUTH JONES

When changes in color or consistency continue for more than a few days you should take talk to a health-care provider. Chronic constipation can obstruct the bowels, while chronic diarrhea can make it difficult for a person to absorb necessary nutrients from food. Both could even be a sign for more serious conditions. Pay attention to any signs of blood. If you haven't eaten any of the foods, described above, that could possibly turn your stool this color, you should see a doctor immediately. Our poop can provide a wealth of knowledge about our health and ourselves. So next time you go take note of what's happening. Your toilet bowl could be a window into your health.

Ruth Jones is the health commissioner for the City of Quincy.

Social Security Matters

How Is My Benefit Amount Determined?

By RUSSELL GLOOR

AMAC Certified Social Security Advisor
Association Of Mature American Citizens

Dear Rusty: I am 60 years old. I have worked full-time since age 22. I am thinking about working part-time ages 62-65. When I start collecting my social security benefit sometime after age 65, will my monthly amount be based on only the last few years of my working? Can you please explain how my monthly amount will be determined? Signed: Planning My Future

Dear Planning: I admire that you're thinking ahead to your retirement years and I'm happy to clarify this for you. Your Social Security benefit, when you claim it, will be based upon the highest earning 35 years of your lifetime working career (not only the last few years). To determine your benefit, Social Security will take your entire record of lifetime earnings, adjust each year for inflation, and select the 35 years in which you had the highest earnings.

After totaling those years they'll divide by 420 (the number of months in 35 years) to determine your "average indexed monthly earnings" (AIME). They then break your AIME into several parts (using what's known as "bend points") and then take a percentage of each part and add it up to arrive at what's called your "primary insurance amount" or "PIA." The "bend point" values change each year, but for 2019 they are $926 and $5,583.

To compute your benefit, the formula will take 90% of the first $926 of your AIME; 32% of your AIME between $926 and $5,583; and 15% of any amount of your AIME over $5,583. The product of those three computations are added together to arrive at your PIA.

Your PIA is the amount you will get at your full retirement age, or your "FRA," which for you (born in 1959) is 66 years and 10 months. If you claim any earlier than your FRA, your benefit will be reduced - about 29% less if claimed at 62. If you wait beyond your FRA the benefit will be more - 8% more for each year you delay, up to age 70 when maximum is reached. At age 70 your benefit will be about 25% more than it would be at your FRA. But a note of caution: any benefit estimates you have now from Social Security assume you'll keep earning at your current level until you reach your FRA, so if you work part-time starting at age 62 your benefit amounts will be less than those shown in the current estimates.

Finally, the above applies to your own individual SS retirement benefit from your own lifetime work record. If you are married, and your PIA is less than 50% of your husband's PIA, then you might also be eligible for a spousal boost from your husband. Or if you are the higher earner, your husband might be eligible for a spousal boost from you when you claim your Social Security benefit.

QCU Helps Provide Learning Tools To Students

Ten years ago, Mike Letorney, of Horace Mann Companies, wanted to support educators and give back to the community. With that objective in mind, he created the "Read to Succeed" Program. Each year, the program awards over 30 Nook E-readers to students from Weymouth, Hanover, Holbrook and Hingham elementary and middle schools.

This year, Quincy Credit Union, an advocate for literacy and community joined Mike to support his initiative.

Each school year, recipients are nominated by their teachers and school administration staff for various accomplishments. The selection criteria included good deeds, helping others, perfect attendance, community involvement and reading efforts. The "Read to Succeed Program" also provides a unique opportunity for educators to award students for non-traditional accomplishments.

The program relies on technology to encourage students to read and learn beyond the classroom. Recently, an award ceremony was held at Hingham Barnes and Noble to acknowledge the students' efforts, and to distribute the e-readers. The pride and encouragement from the crowd created a contagious buzz of excitement as winners were announced and presented with their nooks.

Quincy Credit Union provides several literacy initiatives to encourage reading and financial responsibility for students and adults alike. QCU recently kicked off their annual summer reading program, "Learn and Earn" and offers a financial education website to promote positive financial lessons for all.

Quincy Credit Union currently provides financial services to over 35,000 members operating from two locations: 100 Quincy Ave., Quincy and 519 Columbian St., Weymouth. Membership is available to those who live or work in Norfolk and Plymouth Counties and Dorchester.

The MBTA has provided shuttle bus service between Quincy Center, Wollaston and North Quincy stations while the work at Wollaston unfolded. The shuttle service will conclude on Friday with the station open again.

The T will continue to let passengers travel between Quincy Center and Boston on the Commuter Rail for the cost of a subway fare while a new parking garage is being built at the North Quincy station; the garage is set to open as soon as next year. Subway and Zone 1A monthly passes are accepted.

Additional work does remain as part of the Wollaston project, including repaving Newport Street between Brook and Beale Streets and repaving Greenwood Avenue from Beale Street to Woodbine Street.

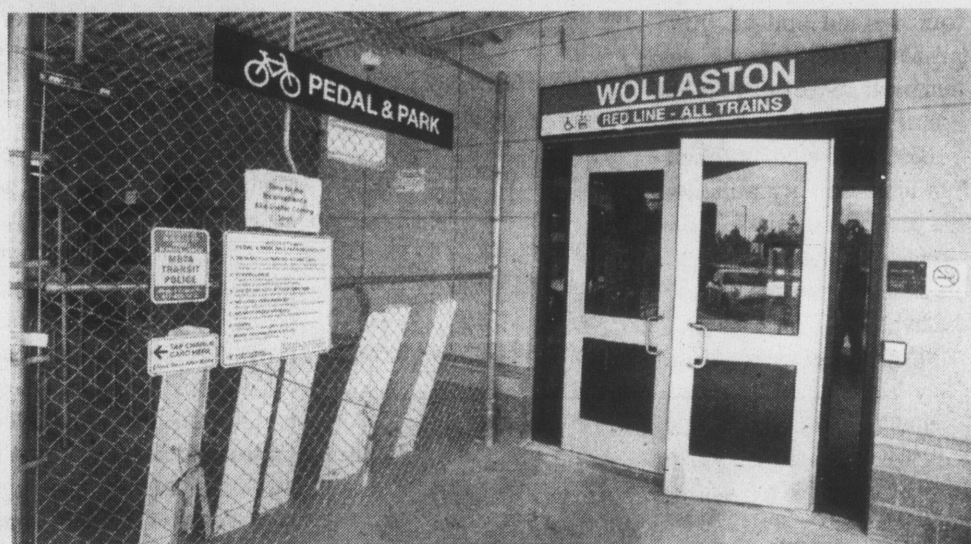

The opening of the new Wollaston station was the second of two milestones for the MBTA last week. The first new Orange Line train made its debut on Aug. 14; the T will replace its entire fleet of Orange Line trains with 152 new cars by 2022.

Zoning Change Sought In Houghs Neck

the area, and new businesses could replace them, but construction of new multi-family projects would not be allowed.

"Business B gives you advantage that if you wanted to sell your property and you're on Sea Street somewhere in that area, you can go up four stories," McCarthy said. "This ordinance is basically saying that everything in place right now if you're business, nothing changes. If you change your use and you go from business...and you want to change it to residential, it reverts back to Res. A."

McCarthy said he plans to work with City Solicitor Jim Timmins to make some changes to the bill before the council considers it in the fall.

"I'm going to work on the ordinance a little bit before we pass it in September to tweak it a little bit because there are certain folks that own property down there in that area that have a business and then also have, let's say, a rental," McCarthy said. "If somebody wanted to do some work on their house or extend something, I wouldn't have a problem with that. It's the complete change in use."

"So, if Dave McCarthy owned a bowling alley on Sea Street, let's say where the fire station is, Dave McCarthy can't take his bowling alley down and put up a four-story residential. Dave McCarthy has got to put a single-family there or Dave McCarthy can change it to a bait-and-tackle, The Quincy Sun, a restaurant - a business."

"So, business stays with business. If you jump from business to residential, you revert back to Res. A, but there will be a few stipulations so that owners that have multi-families down there now can add or delete to their structure. But the complete taking down and going back up with a four-story condominium anywhere on Sea Street between Brill Field and Manet Ave, I want to put the brakes on to protect the neighborhood."

McCarthy expects the council will vote in the ordinance, which is currently pending in committee, in the fall.

"It will come out in September and be voted on," he said.

"I think it is a proactive move and I think the other councillors in some of the wards that have sections that can be protected should look at it. I think they will," McCarthy added later. "I don't want to cripple anybody business-wise, I don't want to cripple anybody residential-wise, but if you give them an inch, they might end up taking a mile. It's a good ordinance that gets us grounded to Res. A."

McCarthy said he filed the ordinance earlier this year in response to residents' concerns about overdevelopment. The councilor said he wants to stop it from creeping into the city's neighborhoods.

"Everybody, I think, and their brother is always, 'overdevelopment, overdevelopment.' One of the things that I've tried to stay with is, some of the development that creeps into the neighborhoods, I'm not a big fan of. I try to slow it down, modify it, but sometimes... it's just the way the city is [zoned]," McCarthy said.

"I looked at all of Ward 1 and wanted to start to take a look at certain neighborhoods where, in my opinion, they have been populated to their max but still there are areas where developers go in because of the zoning code that is there - Business B or Business A - and put something up."

McCarthy said he is also looking to rezone the Sea Street corridor in the area of Adams Shore, parts of which are likewise zoned for business use.

"I'm looking at also Adams Shore, which is Business A. Timeout Pizza, the supermarket area, all the way up to The Hofbrau and Dunkin' Donuts That's all Business A," McCarthy said. "You can go up three stories."

Elsewhere in his ward, McCarthy could possibly rezone the vicinity of Edison Park, Edison Street, Stewart Street in Quincy Point and the area of Merrymount Road in Quincy Center. Both neighborhoods are presently Residential B, which allows multi-family development, and McCarthy would like to see them changed to Residential A.

"There are a few areas though I want to look at. One is the Edison Park, Edison Street, Stewart Street area, which is Residence B. I'd like to make sure that that is an area that doesn't get out of control. I'm going to look at that area and I'm also going to look at Merrymount Road over behind the old Central Middle School," he said.

"It's pretty populated with houses and condos now, and it's almost at the point where that's enough. There are a couple of big homes that have big lots that are right on Merrymount Road...that if they came down and it was Residence B, someone could go up three stories."

Barry J. Welch Varsity Soccer Field Dedication Saturday

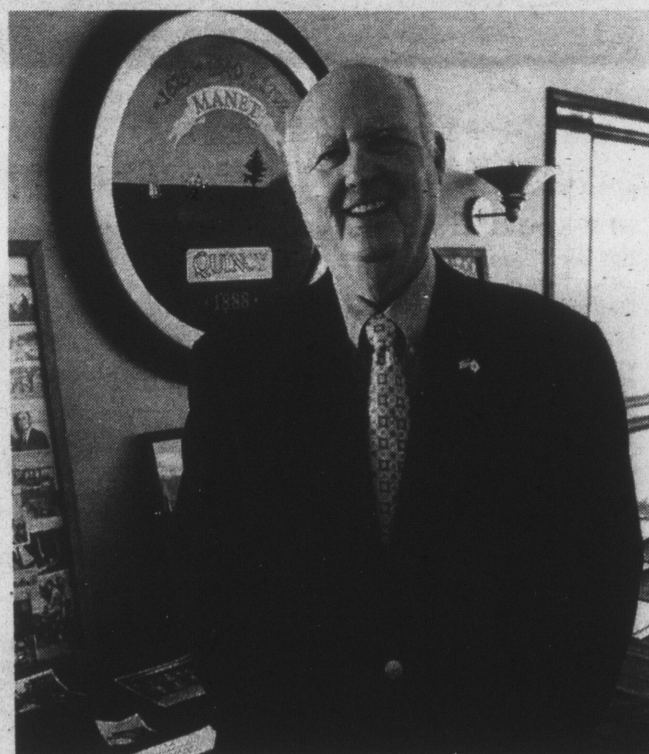

Varsity Soccer Field in Merrymount Park will be dedicated in the name of Barry J. Welch, the city's long-time recreation director who served in the Quincy Recreation Department for 55 years, at a ceremony set for Saturday, Aug. 24 at 1 p.m.

The ceremony will be followed by a celebration at Pageant Field starting at approximately 1:30 p.m.

Former Quincy Recreation employees are encouraged to attend the "Rec Reunion" at Pageant Field that day. There will be a contest for the "oldest rec shirt" from leaders that saved their old work shirts. The celebration will include a barbecue, music, games, and fun.

Mayor Thomas Koch presented the proposal to name the field in Welch's honor to the Quincy Park and Recreation Board six months ago. The board unanimously supported Koch's initiative to recognize this outstanding public servant.

"Barry epitomizes what public service is all about,"

BARRY WELCH, the city's longtime Recreation Department director who retired earlier this year, will be honored Aug. 24 when the city dedicates Varsity Soccer Field in his name. Welch served the department for 55 years including 37 years as director. Quincy Sun Photo/Robert Bosworth

Koch said. "He is a pioneer in the recreation field and has provided thousands of Quincy young people with a great experience in our playground, clinic, swim, and gym programs. Recreation in Quincy is synonymous with Barry Welch and this dedication will ensure that his work is forever remembered."

Welch was first appointed in June, 1964 as an assistant recreation playground leader. In 1975, he was appointed as the assistant director of recreation. Mayor Frank McCauley named Welch the director of the Recreation Department Feb.

1, 1982 where he served until his retirement 37 years later to the day.

Added Mayor Koch, "We encourage all those that worked with and for Barry to join us in saluting his service to Quincy. It would great to bring back as many former Rec leaders as we could to celebrate his incredible career in local government."

Varsity Soccer Field is adjacent to Veterans Memorial Stadium across from Collins Rest-A-While playground and the Mitchell/McCoy softball field on Merrymount Parkway.

Give your Child the Secrets to Studying Help them be more Successful in School and Life!

Do you know that there are 3 reasons why a person gives up learning or studying something?

They are:

1. THE MISUNDERSTOOD WORD. A word you hear or read that you don't know the meaning of, or that you have the wrong definition for, is called a misunderstood word. Regular use of simple dictionaries with complete definitions are needed to correct this problem.
2. NOT HAVING THE OBJECT WITH YOU THAT YOU ARE STUDYING. For example, if you are learning how to fix a car, it helps to have a car to look at when studying. If you cannot do this, you can use pictures of a car and its parts instead.
3. NOT STUDYING ONE STEP AT A TIME. For example, if you are having difficulty with math in doing division, you probably didn't learn addition, subtraction or multiplication well enough. Also, when playing any sport, it would be better to practice one step at a time, like dribbling or shooting a basketball before playing a game.

Apply the information in this flyer to teach your child how to become a better student. To become an expert on how to study, visit StudyTechnology.org and click, "Learning is Fun" or contact the Church of Scientology, 1515 Hancock St., Quincy, 3rd floor 617-266-9500 to do a study course.

Over 150 Entries Featured At Marina Bay Arts Affair

By TOM GORMAN

The 24th annual Arts Affair at Marina Bay drew more than 153 entries from more than 50 local artists during the weekend of Aug. 3 and 4 and this year featured a Marina Bay theme exhibit.

The lobby and cafeteria of 500 Victory Rd. were transformed into an art gallery where the original works of paintings, sculptures, drawings, and photographs were displayed. Several artists presented art demonstrations and there was a live model session where attendees could try their hand at painting or drawing the model.

Scores of attendees viewed the displays and tried their luck at the raffle table where prizes ranging from original art to gift cards were awarded.

The Arts Affair rolled out a new themed exhibit this year - Marina Bay in All Seasons. Artists were asked to create works in all media featuring Marina Bay.

"The idea was to interpret Marina Bay in all the seasons," said artist Dan Myers III of the Quincy Art Association, who won first place in the category with his sculpture, "La Mer (The Sea)." "We had 22 entries."

On July 7, 16 artists gathered at various locations around Marina Bay to paint and photograph such features as the clock tower, the skyline from Squantum Point, and boats in the Marina. There were some allegorical treatments such as Myers' sculpture which is based on composer Debussy's symphony of the rising sea.

Other entries included references to aviators Amelia Earhart and Harriet Quilby, both of whom flew out of the Squantum air field that is now Marian Bay. There will be another session in the fall to capture Marina Bay in a different season.

The Marina Bay in All Seasons replaced the popular Fabulous Fakes where artists copied or interpreted renowned masterpieces. Arts Affair officials said the Marina Bay in All Seasons would run in the next few years as a new challenge to artists. The Fabulous Fakes may return at some point in the future.

There were 20 local art associations represented at this year's event including the Quincy Art Association, the South Shore Camera Club, and the South Shore Art Association. There were four artists who judged the entries: Kent Archer, Virginia Mahoney, Debra Frederickson, and Mona Podgurski.

East, West Elm Avenues One-Way Traffic Changes On Hold

By SCOTT JACKSON

City officials have put on hold a plan to temporarily change East and West Elm Avenues in Wollaston to one-way streets.

The city's Traffic, Parking, Alarm and Lighting Department had planned to convert the streets to one-way roads, with traffic flowing in opposite directions, on a temporary basis starting this Monday. The one-week experiment would have allowed the department to test out the idea of turning the roads into one-way streets on a permanent basis.

Mayor Thomas Koch's chief of staff, Chris Walker, said the mayor has put those plans on hold to allow for a more robust public outreach process.

"The mayor felt a change of this magnitude, even on a temporary basis, requires a robust communication plan, including a community meeting," Walker said.

"We will regroup with TPAL and figure out what the next steps will be," he added.

During the planned experiment, East Elm Avenue would have become a one-way street from Quincy Shore Drive to Franklin Avenue. West Elm Avenue would have become a one-way street between Billings Road and Quincy Shore Drive.

An engineering study had recommended converting East and West Elm Avenue to a pair of one-way streets because the roadways are too narrow to support two-way travel and parking on both sides of the street. Chris Cassani, the director of TPAL, said in a letter to residents sent ahead of the proposed changes.

"This new traffic pattern will preserve parking, enhance safety and create order along this very busy corridor," Cassani said.

Registry Of Deeds, NeighborWorks Housing Partners

Register of Deeds William P. O'Donnell is retiring the importance he places on the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds partnership with NeighborWorks Housing Solutions, an organization recently created through a merger of two non-profits agencies, NeighborWorks of Southern Massachusetts and Housing Solutions of Southeastern Massachusetts.

"NeighborWorks Housing Solutions," O'Donnell said, "is a non-profit organization that provides housing options for residents in more than 75 cities and towns throughout Southern Massachusetts, including parts of Norfolk County. They provide a range of assistance from helping with the mortgage modification process, offering credit counseling and working with clients to starve off a foreclosure. They have four locations including offices in Quincy and Brockton, and can be reached at 617-770-2227."

O'Donnell continued: "For the past several years, my office has partnered with reputable non-profit agencies by promoting their services when it comes to mortgage modification and foreclosure issues. While Norfolk County is a destination location to live and work, some of our neighbors are facing economic hardship."

O'Donnell noted that in July 2019, a total of 8 foreclosure deeds were filed at the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. In addition, 29 Notice to Foreclose Mortgages, the first step in the foreclosure process, were also recorded.

"Robert Corley, CEO of NeighborWorks Housing Solutions and his entire team do an outstanding job working on a myriad number of housing related is-suces in Southern Massachusetts," O'Donnell said. "The Registry of Deeds is truly proud of its partnership with NeighborWorks Housing Solutions and looks forward to many years of working closely together with them in serving the people of Norfolk County."

Additional information on the Registry's foreclosure assistance efforts can be found on the Registry's website www.norfolkdeeds.org.

Updating Condo Balcony

Can you please give me some ideas to update my condo balcony? I'd like to begin with the concrete floor.
Joanne

For this project, you want to keep in mind not only aesthetics but also cost, durability, safety, climate suitability, and activity level. There are many options from do-it-yourself to professionally installed solutions.

To save the cost of labor, there are interlocking decking tiles and other tiles made of rubber, foam, carpet, and artificial grass you can install yourself.

Otherwise, outdoor carpet runs from $.31 to about $.50 per square foot or artificial grass from $.42 to about $.50 per square foot at Home Depot. As with most choices, you get what you pay for and since a balcony is typically a small space, don't "cheap out."

A popular choice has always been pressure-treated, natural wood decking. You can paint or stain your balcony any color but this does require annual cleaning and sealing every few years. The wood choice is more affordable than today's composite decking but this pricey option is made of recycled materials, durable, virtually maintenance-free, and comes in many color and pattern options.

Outdoor patio tiles can be made of ceramic, porcelain, quarry stone, terracotta, or travertine. Construction and sales professionals will help you choose those that are recommended for New England winters, slip and scratch resistant, and appropriate for family activity levels. According to flooring.com, they can range from $1 per square foot for ceramic to $50 per square foot for slate.

If you don't mind the concrete you currently have as a base, it can be painted, stenciled, stained, or stamped for a new look.

Finally, spend $25 more to string lights along the balcony railing for another quick update. On my balcony, I painted the dark metal panels and wooden railing a medium beige (to match my outdoor carpet which is seven years old and looks brand new!) and strung outdoor holiday lights as well as a string of larger bulb lights I bought at a local hardware store, and I - as well as my guests - love the look.

"STILL NUMBER ONE"

On Aug. 13, at approximately 12:27 p.m., Officer Paul Farina and an ambulance were dispatched to the area of the Quincy Center Post Office (47 Washington St.) for a report of a pedestrian accident.

Upon arrival, the officer saw a female sprawled out on her back near the intersection of Maple Street and Washington Street. Although there was no blood or abrasions on the pedestrian, she did complain of back and neck pain. Officer Farina interviewed her as medical help arrived and he learned that she did not remember anything from the crash other than that she was struck by a vehicle.

Anti-Crime Officer Mike Brandolini arrived on scene and interviewed a male who told him he was a witness (a 17-year-old Quincy resident who was excellent!) who said that he saw the suspect vehicle, possibly a 2009 Nissan SUV strike the pedestrian and drive off down Washington Street towards McGrath Highway. He added that he believed the driver was a male about 50 years old. Officer Brandolini radioed that description into Quincy Police Dispatch and Officer Cleary (D1/783) and Officer Donovan (D2/784) began to search in the area for the vehicle.

Shortly after the BOLO was given, Officer Cleary spotted a Nissan matching the description, so he pulled in behind it at the traffic lights of South Street and Washington Street. When the light turned green, the Nissan took off at a high speed. Officer Cleary activated his siren and blue lights and the Nissan immediately turned into a nearby parking lot on Washington Street. A male, the sole occupant in the vehicle opened the door and quickly stepped out but was ordered back in by the officer.

As Officer Cleary approached the vehicle he observed the suspect/driver with his head on the steering wheel. When asked what was going on, the driver said, "I hit someone." Officer Cleary then asked him why he didn't stop and he said, "Because I don't have a license." After this exchange, the driver suddenly appeared to go into a state of shock and repeatedly said, "Oh my God - Oh my God." He then added, "I will lose my house. I will lose everything." Officer Cleary placed the driver under arrest and transported him to the station for booking.

Once at the station, Officer Cleary further interviewed the witness who said that he saw the victim walking across Maple Street in the crosswalk. He saw a gray Nissan pull out from Maple Street without stopping at the stop sign on Maple Street and strike the pedestrian. He added the Nissan backed up and the driver began to look around the area, then pulled back out around the pedestrian and drove southbound on Washington Street. Based on the witness statement and the driver's admission, the 57-year-old Weymouth resident was charged with leaving the scene of personal injury, operating a motor vehicle with a revoked license, negligent operation of a motor vehicle, stop sign violation and a crosswalk violation. The suspect/driver has over 25 traffic offenses on his driving record.

Due to the information gathered from the driver and the witness, Officer Cleary submitted a copy of his report to the Registry of Motor Vehicles for a request for immediate threat license suspension/revocation.

Quincy College, QCAP IT Fundamentals Program Students Celebrated

Eight Quincy College IT Fundamentals+ 6 Credit Certificate Program students from Quincy College had a lot to celebrate Aug. 15th: completing their Information Technology education in 20 weeks, many with job prospects on the horizon.

The IT Fundamentals+ certificate program is funded through a Massachusetts Department of Elementary and Secondary Education Grant and is provided to the community by a collaboration between Quincy Community Action Programs, Inc. (QCAP) and Quincy College.

Addressing a room full of his students, their families, and representatives from Quincy College and Quincy Community Action Programs, Inc. (QCAP), Sam Bernstein, QCAP ESOL Instructor reflected on the value of the IT Fundamentals+ program: "The American Dream is alive and well in Quincy, MA. If you have a dream and are willing to work hard for it, you can succeed."

The eight students who completed the program are the first cohort of students to graduate from the IT Fundamentals+ program from Quincy College. They are:

Ivan Bulaev of Weymouth; Jorge Godoy of Brockton; Qing Lian Liu of Braintree; Fengdan Lu of Quincy; Ken Nguyen of Hanson; Khin Khin Yee of Quincy; Dhimitraq Zguri of Weymouth and Guo Zhang of Braintree.

In attendance at the graduation ceremony, held at Quincy College's Quincy Campus were representatives from QCAP and Quincy College. Quincy College President Michael G. Bellotti along with Beth Ann Strollo, chief executive officer of QCAP delivered greetings to the graduates and their families along with Kristen Schlapp, program director of Adult Education & Workforce Development for QCAP.

Faculty Sam Bernstein, QCAP ESOL Instructor, Mark Linnane and Tayo Banjo, Quincy College professors provided program reflections.

Guo Zhang, Dhimitraq Zguri, and Jorge Godoy shared diverse student reflections as parents, students, and professionals to fellow classmates to conclude the ceremony.

Guo Zhang reflected on how she discovered the IT Fundamentals+ Program, learning of it at her daughter's Headstart Program when she was an Uber driver. She was nervous she would miss out on this great opportunity.

"What we get from the IT Fundamentals+ Program is not only the information we have learned in the classes, but the resources we were introduced to in the program and opportunities we got from it. We learned to understand ourselves more by identifying our learning styles, setting goals, evaluating own skills. We visited MassHire, participated in a Quincy College Job Fair, and met with employers to explore the field and get resources. Thanks to all the teachers for helping us to learn and grow and to QCAP and Quincy College for having the program," said Guo Zhang, IT Fundamentals+ graduate.

Dhimitraq Zguri, an Albanian who emigrated from Italy, said he feels more positive about his future in the United States. He came to the United States not knowing English and now he says: "I look at life with a different angle, and a more positive outlook."

Jorge Godoy of Brockton also reflected on the Class of 2019 being the first cohort of students to graduate from the IT Fundamentals+ program: "We are the pioneers of this program."

Students enrolled in the free, IT Fundamentals+ program take customized ESOL courses for IT, in addition to Quincy College classes in Operating Systems (CSI 217, 3 credits) and Principles of Customer Service (BUS 202, 3 credits). Students have also received test preparation assistance in order to pass COMPTIA Exam. Furthermore, Job Readiness and Job Placement components are embedded into program curriculum, too.

"Collaboration between Quincy College and Quincy Community Action Programs is an excellent partnership that created a streamlined pathway for non traditional students to pursue higher education, at no cost," said Kate Lopci, Associate Vice President of Workforce Development and Community Engagement.

"The IT Networking Fundamentals+ program is designed based on a customized English as Second Language course combined with a business and networking focus, a total of 6 college credit courses," Lopci continued. "Students can transfer credits earned and further their education into an Associate Degree program, at Quincy College. We are grateful to the Adult and Community Learning Service Department (ACLS) at Department of Elementary and Secondary Education (DESE), for funding this program and to QCAP for their partnership."

Graduates of the program will be placed into jobs in the South Shore and Greater Boston area, as Computer User Support Specialists. This free program includes six transferable college credits, books, and all college fees. Four of the Quincy College IT Networking Fundamentals+ Program Graduates have already passed the COMPTIA certification exam with the other students preparing for their exam.

The Quincy College IT Fundamentals+ program is 230 class hours of academic and career development training on the Quincy Campus of Quincy College. In collaboration with Quincy Community Action Partners, QCAP provided job readiness training and ESOL support for students in the program. Four of the Quincy College IT Networking Fundamentals+ Program Graduates have already passed the CompTIA IT Fundamentals+ certification exam with the other students preparing for their exam.

Gasoline Prices Down One Cent This Week

Gasoline prices in Massachusetts are down one cent this week, according to AAA Northeast.

AAA's Aug. 19 survey of prices in Massachusetts finds self-serve, regular unleaded averaging $2.63 per gallon. The Massachusetts price is two cents higher than the national average for regular unleaded of $2.61. A year ago at this time, the average price in Massachusetts was - nineteen cents higher at $2.82.

"Despite robust demand, gas prices continue to trend downward, which is good news for drivers heading out for the long Labor Day weekend, taking end-of-summer vacations, and driving their college students back to campus," said Mary Maguire, director of Public and Legislative Affairs.

The range in prices in the latest AAA survey for unleaded regular is 62 cents, from a low of $2.43 to a high of $3.05.

A Job Well Done

Numerous officers responded to the scene and found two males who were bloodied on their bodies and clothes. Officer Graham noted both males appeared to be under the influence of alcohol based on slurred speech and the smell of alcoholic beverage. Brewster EMS ambulances were requested to respond at this time.

Although the males were separated they continued to try to get at each other, making threats which resulted in them being brought to the ground by the officers. This resulted in both males being handcuffed.

A female witness stated she was at the alley with one of the males (male 1) when another male (male 2) approached them. She said the males began to argue so she tried to intervene by getting the male who approached them to leave. Male 2 left walking northbound on Hancock Street. Moments later, male 2 returned to the alley, got into the face of male 1 and the argument resumed. Male 2 returned to the alley and tackled male 1 to the ground.

Once on the ground, male 2 punched male 1 numerous times, however male 1 was able to get out from under male 2 and get on top of him. Male 2 then bit the left ear of male 1. At this time, the police arrived. Both males were examined by Brewster EMS on scene and it was determined that male 1's ear had been bitten off. He was transported to Quincy Medical Center via ambulance. His ear was located and brought to the hospital with him.

Male 2 did not have any injuries and it was determined that the blood on his clothing and body came from male 1's ear area.

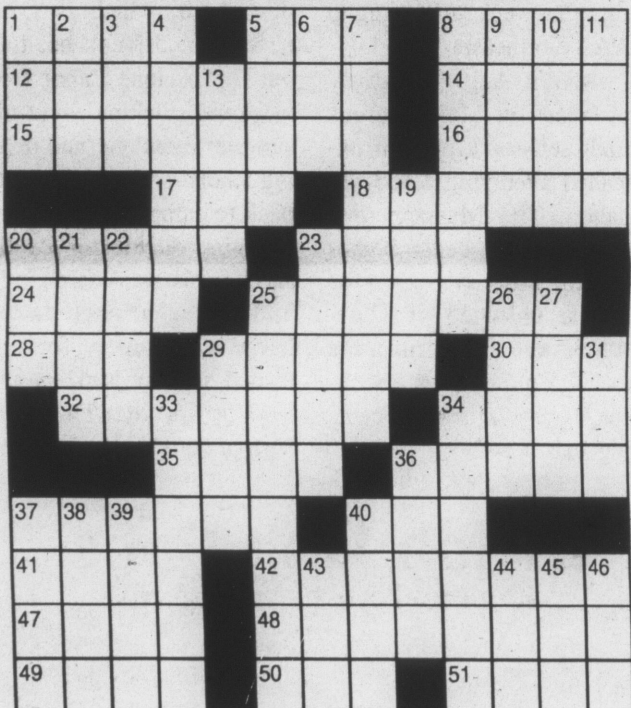

Male 2, a 50-year-old Quincy resident, was placed under arrest for mayhem and assault and battery.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Be careful not to allow the backers of a new financial "deal" to pull the wool over the Lamb's eyes. It could hold fewer plusses and more negatives than you were first led to believe.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) It's a good idea to finish all incomplete tasks so that you can devote your attention to next week's projects. The weekend could hold surprises for romantic Fernandas and Ferdinands.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) A workplace suggestion you made a while ago that you might have forgotten could come back with a request to turn it from idea to reality. Your social life picks up considerably this week-end.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Someone from the past could return with an intriguing opportunity for a future project. Check into it, by all means. But don't neglect your current responsibilities in the meantime.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Keeping your claws sheathed and using good humor instead to counter someone who's bad-mouthing the Big Cat isn't easy. But it's the best way to avoid more problems down the line.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) A workplace situation could improve if you're less critical and more supportive of those who are, after all, trying to do their best. Let them know you're there to help when necessary.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A new job offer might not carry all the benefits you're seeking. Make sure you know what you're entitled to, what is off the table and what is negotiable before you make a decision.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) A social obligation you would rather get out of could hold some surprisingly positive aspects. Why not go and see for yourself? A family member makes a curious request.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Before tackling that new project awaiting you at home or on the job, take time out for some much-deserved pampering to help lift your spirits and restore your energy levels.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Your social calendar begins to fill up more quickly than you expected. And that's great. You deserve to enjoy some good fun after so much time spent on serious matters.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A domestic situation continues to improve, thanks to all the tender, loving concern you've shown. A colleague makes a questionable move that you might want to check out sooner rather than later.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A sudden turn in a romantic relationship calls for both a rational and passionate response. Keep the love level high, but also find out why the problem arose in the first place.

BORN THIS WEEK: You often set high standards for others. But to your credit, you set the same expectations for yourself.

HOLLYWOOD -- Leonardo DiCaprio has moved on from Quentin Tarantino's "Once Upon a Time ... in Hollywood," opposite Brad Pitt and Margot Robbie, to Martin Scorsese's film "Killers of the Flower Moon," opposite Robert De Niro. This will be DiCaprio's sixth film with Scorsese and the 11th teaming of De Niro with Scorsese. Netflix plans to release Scorsese's "The Irishman," which brought De Niro together with Al Pacino and Joe Pesci, into movie theaters later this year for award consideration. Set in the 1920s, "Killers of the Flower Moon" is a drama about the FBI's rise to prominence after investigating the suspicious deaths of Native Americans killed to obtain their oil-rich land. De Niro and DiCaprio worked together twice before, in "This Boy's Life" (1993) and "Marvin's Room" (1996). Meanwhile, Brad Pitt has the sci-fi film "Ad Astra," with Tommy Lee Jones and Ruth Negga; as well as producing "The King" (based on Shakespeare's "Henry VI"), with Robert Pattinson and Joel Edgerton; and the crime drama "Kajillionaire," with Evan Rachel Wood. Margot Robbie has an untitled drama with Charlize Theron, Nicole Kidman, Kate McKinnon, Allison Janney, John Lithgow and Malcolm McDowell (in theaters Dec. 20); the DC Comics-based superhero film "Birds of Prey," with Mary Elizabeth Winstead, Rosie Perez and Ewan McGregor (out Feb. 20); and is producing the thriller "Promising Young Women," with Alison Brie, Connie Britton and Laverne Cox.

 The 1986 movie musical "Little Shop of Horrors," which starred Rick Moranis, is getting the remake treatment. Josh Gad, who starred in Broadway's "The Book of Mormon," in five "Frozen" films (as Olaf) and as Gaston's friend LeFou in "Beauty and the Beast," is in talks to play Seymour. Rebel Wilson -- of "Pitch Perfect," "The Hustle" (with Anne Hathaway) and the upcoming "Cats" film -- is in talks to play Audrey. Also in the works is a third Sherlock Holmes film, again with Robert Downey Jr. The first two films, which each grossed over $545 million, were directed by Guy Ritchie, Madonna's former husband. Ritchie has recently completed the crime film "The Gentlemen," with Matthew McConaughey, Colin Farrell, Charlie Hunnam, Henry Golding, Hugh Grant and "Downton Abbey's" Michelle Dockery.

 Mark Wahlberg, who last scored big with "Instant Family" (2018), is making up for lost screen time, starring in the Netflix mystery "Wonderland," with Alan Arkin; "Good Joe Bell," with Connie Britton and Gary Sinise; and the sci-fi film "Infinite." He also lends his voice as The Blue Falcon in the 3D computer-animated comedy "Scoob," from the Scooby-Doo franchise, along with Zac Efron, Will Forte, Amanda Seyfried, Gina Rodriguez, Tracy Morgan and Ken Jeong, for a May 15 release. When does he find time to flip burgers while running Wahlburgers?

Campeche Chair --- This Mexican chair with its leather sling seat is known as a Campeche chair. The style was inspired by a Roman magistrate's chair, which had a similar shape and sloping seat that was considered very restful. More recent Campeche chairs were made in the 19th century in Latin America, the Caribbean, Spain, the Balearic Isles and other nearby areas, and Indonesia. They are named for the Bay of Campeche in the Gulf of Mexico, or perhaps the town of Campeche in the Yucatan where they were made.

From 1800 to 1825, many of these chairs, sometimes called "plantation chairs," were shipped to New Orleans and used in Southern homes. Presidents Thomas Jefferson and James Madison both had several Campeche chairs with tooled leather seats. By the 1830s, there were many references to the chairs in books and letters. This chair has two wooden X-shaped sides held together with horizontal rails. The sling back and seat is made of tooled leather with an art nouveau design that suggests a date in the late 1800s. It sold at a Neal Auction last year for $976.

 Q: My sister and I have a first edition of "Paper Dolls and How to Make Them, A Book for Little Girls" by Anson D.F. Randolph. It reads "Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1856." The book has plates of dolls and doll clothes in color and black and white. We'd like to know how to go about selling it.

A: The first paper dolls were made in France in the 1700s. The first paper dolls made in the United States were printed in 1854 and were sold in boxed sets. Your book was the first American paper doll book. This book has been offered for sale online for over $700. You can try contacting a used bookstore to see what it will offer, or you can contact one of the online booksellers that deals in old books. If you don't have access to a computer, your local library reference department may be able to help you. We checked retail prices at bookstores for you. One wanted $750, another $695. The condition is very important when setting a price.

CURRENT PRICES

Sewing box, burl walnut, brass mount top, escutcheon, lining, silk, padded, 1900s, 5 3/4 x 12 inches, $100.

Perfume bottle, glass, stopper, cranberry, turquoise, frosted, signed Jean Claude, 1993, 12 inches, $190.

Lighter, gold plate, enamel, black stripe, Jeroboam, S.T. Dupont, France, 3 3/4 x 3 inches, $760.

Rug, wool, diagonal stripe border, green, blue, pink, cream field, Edward Fields, 1981, 96 x 96 inches, $945.

TIP: Never wash a "flannel" (also called a "blanket" or "felt"), the small pieces of fabric packed in cigar or cigarette packs about 1914. Some valuable flannels picture baseball players. Washing the fabric will cause it to fade. Instead, put dry flannels and a clean, dry towel in the clothes dryer set on the cool setting. A few tumbles will remove dust.

Strange BUT TRUE

* It was American poet and playwright Edna St. Vincent Millay -- the first woman to win the Pulitzer Prize for poetry, by the way -- who made the following sage observation: "A person who publishes a book appears willfully in public with his pants down."

* It's often been said that necessity is the mother of invention -- and for good reason. Here's an example: The idea for the original pull-top can originated when the inventor was at a picnic; he had forgotten to bring a can opener, so he had to use a car bumper.

* If you live in Georgia, you need to watch that wagging tongue: In that state it's illegal to spread a false rumor.

* According to cetologists, an adult right whale requires 400,000 calories a day to survive. These scientists who specialize in whales also note that the mainstay of these mammals' diet is a flea-sized crustacean called a copepod.

* If you're right-handed, studies show that you tend to wash your left hand more thoroughly than your right hand. Reverse that if you're a leftie.

* A study of 28 women found that screaming has a therapeutic effect on the physiology of the body. After bouts of screaming, the test subjects showed slower heart rates, lower blood pressure and lower body temperature.

* Those who study such things -- and who, evidently, have way too much time on their hands -- claim that there are 108 stitches in a baseball.

* If you take into account all the sales in the world, there are approximately 50 Bibles sold every minute.

Now here's a tip!

by Jo Ann Derson

* "If you have to put a lid over something that is likely to stick to it, try giving the inside of the lid a very light coating of vegetable oil. I do this when I am transporting dip to a potluck. Vegetable oil has no flavor, really, and it's just enough to let the lid come off without taking the top layer with it." -- J.A. in Florida

* "I use an ice-cube tray to freeze leftover coffee so I can use it for iced coffee. It's great because the coffee doesn't water down -- it just gets richer. I save broth this way, too. Last week I pulled out a couple cubes of what I thought were broth to thin my leftover chili. Turns out they were coffee cubes, and the flavor was really good! I was surprised enough that I had to share." -- R.F. in Virginia

* Here's a great way to make waterproof matches for camping. Light a candle or use a wax melt in a warmer. When the wax is good and melted, get a box of matches ready (preferably strike-anywhere matches, but strike on box works, too). Dip each match head into the melted wax and set aside on a piece of parchment until dry and hardened.

* "My daughter is a softball player, and here's what her coach suggested as an ice pack for when she gets home: unpopped popcorn kernels. They get cold but not uncomfortably so, they can easily mold to any body part and they don't melt into a mess. If you needed to, you can empty them out into a pan and stick your hand or foot into it. Be sure to label them so you don't try to pop them later!" -- L.D. in Georgia

"On the job training, working as an apprentice under the journeymen definitely helped me acquire the skills that I have today."

"Heights have never bothered me."

His typical work day begins when he arrives on site around 6 a.m. He starts his climb around 6:30 and 10 to 15 minutes later he reaches the top. Along the way he makes safety checks to ensure the crane is in working order.

"As I am climbing up I check everything to make sure nothing has changed and to make sure the crane is safe," Salvador says. "I make sure all the connections are as they should be while inspecting the crane."

After he finishes inspections and does a safety report, he gets in the cab and checks out the crane's limits, making sure everything is safe and operable and then he goes to work.

Once he gets to the top, he is there for the day which could last 9 or 10 hours. Salvador eats his lunch up there and takes his bathroom breaks there. He uses a cell phone and walkie talkie to communicate with the other 15 workers who are on site.

The crane is considered a mini-tower and has a capacity is 11,000 pounds — five and a half tons. "The further out away from the crane the less capacity the crane can pick," he explains.

"What we are doing here is a concrete cast in place job. We are mostly picking these tables, plywood, 2 x 4s, forms, rebar and alot of other miscellaneous materials including a trailer that sits above the floor of each level that is under construction."

"The crane brought that office trailer to the top for the iron workers and there is another one on the other side for the carpenters," Salvador says. "It's a place where they can get out of the weather, eat their lunch; it has tables and chairs."

The shell of the building is constructed of concrete — not steel. Project developer Peter O'Connell said concrete was selected as the material of choice because it acts as a better sound barrier between floors. The floors will be separated by nine inches of concrete.

"It's Class A construction," O'Connell says, "which is a whole lot different category than anything else. It's not a wood structure — it's concrete which is much more sound proof and safe."

The crane helps position the forms for the concrete. Once they are in place, concrete is pumped from a truck on the ground to a pourer pump on top of the building. From there the concrete is poured into the columns, core or slabs.

The erection of the building is on track to be finished by mid to late October.

"We are moving right along," Salvador says. "We are pouring about one floor, maybe a little bit more, each week and there are only 15 floors plus the roof top so we should be done sometime in mid to late October and then the crane will come down a few weeks after that."

Until that time, Salvador has the best vantage point in Quincy to see the surrounding area.

The view from the top is spectacular.

"I can see for miles," he says. "I can see all of Boston — a panoramic view of the city and all its buildings."

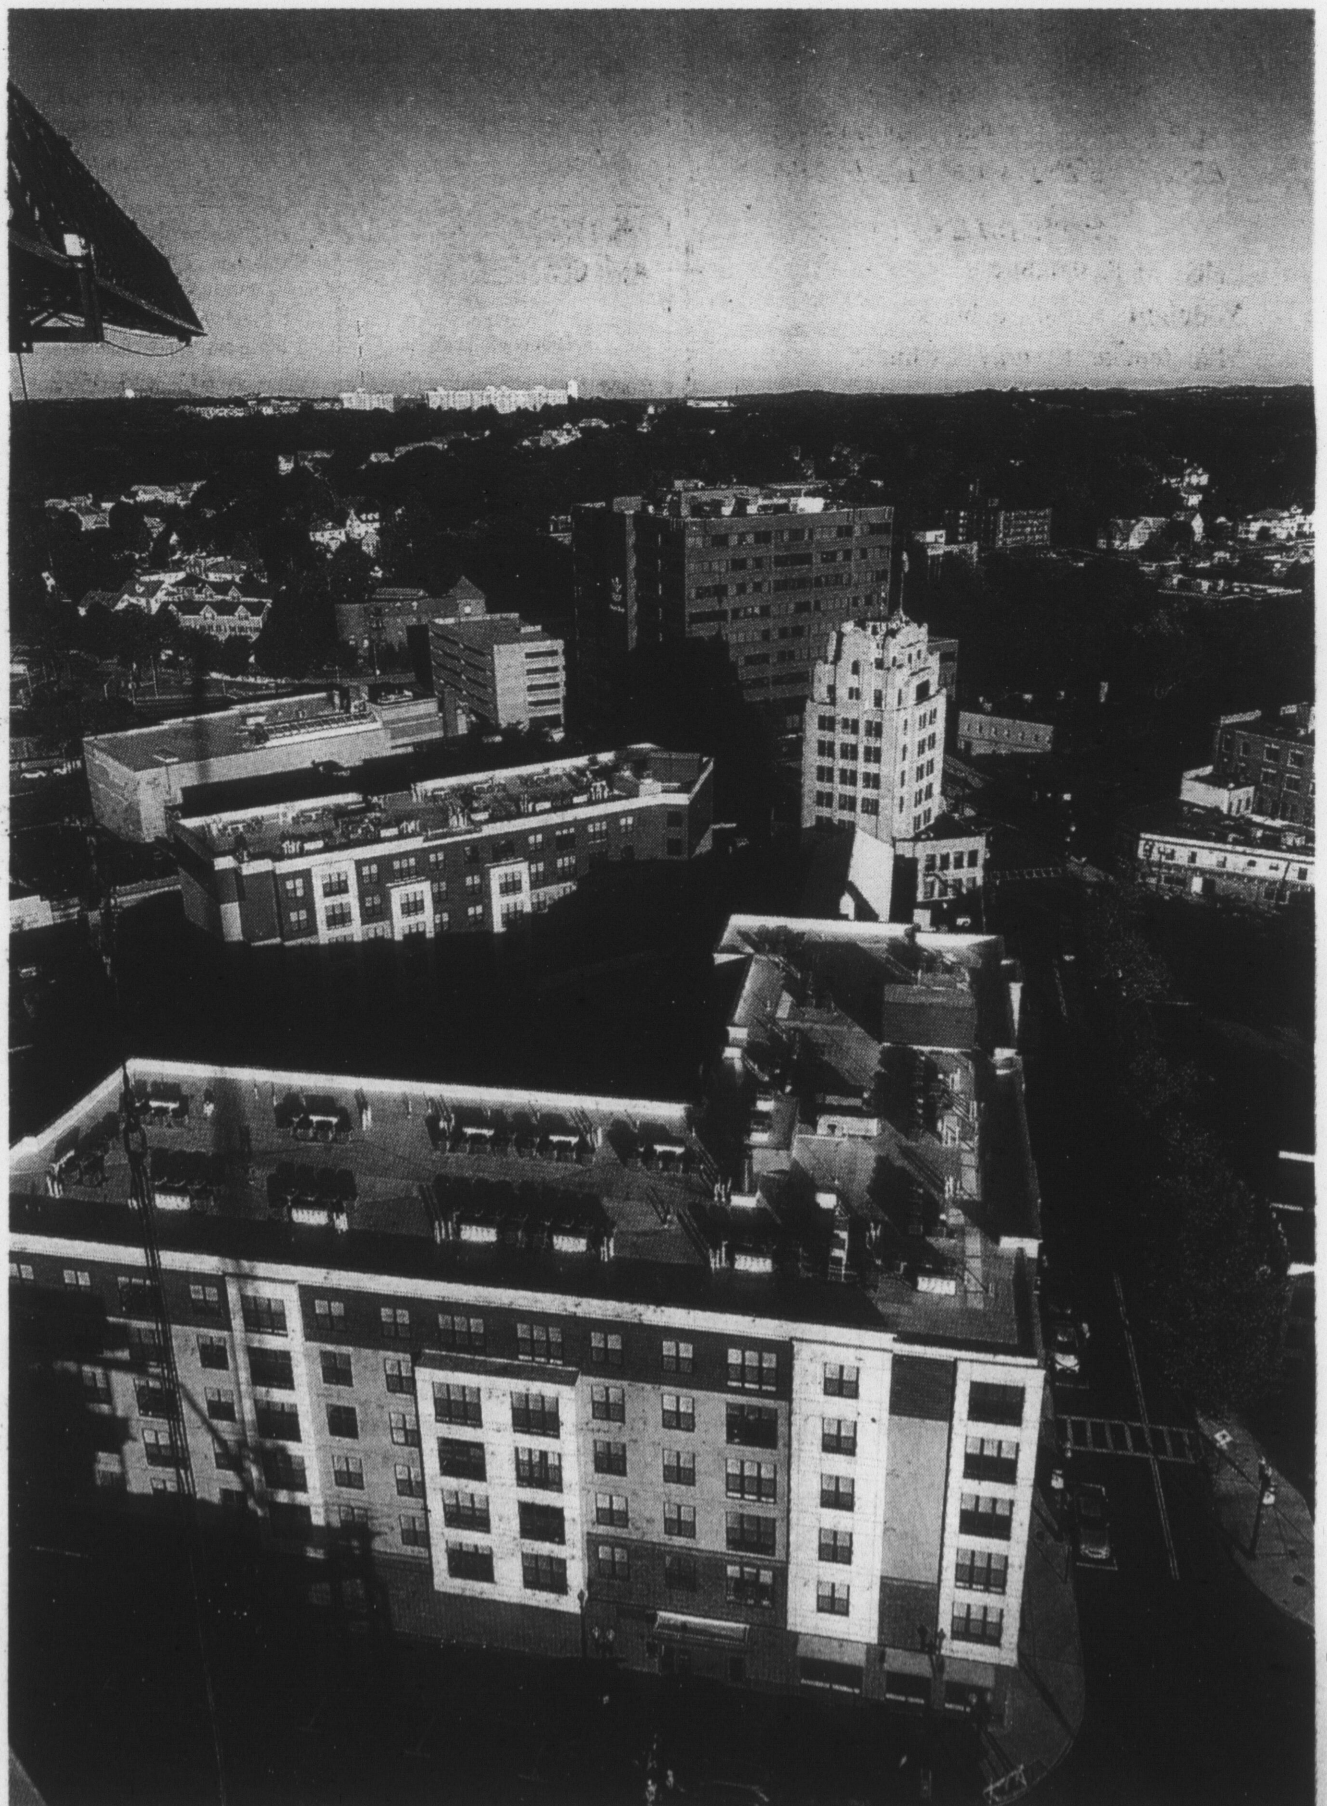

Asked what his biggest challenge is as a crane operator, he replies: "It's not really a challenge but the part of my job that is a little risky is that I have to put a harness on and walk out on the boom and I have to grease and do some maintenance but it's not too difficult for me."

Salvador and G & C Concrete have an impressive list of projects in their portfolio including a 40-story tower near TD Garden in Boston, a few 30-story buildings, a job in the Seaport as well as Gillette Stadium, home of the New England Patriots in Foxboro.

"I love my job," he says. "Some days I wonder how I got such a great job. I work with a great group of guys, very competent and very professional."

High above the ground in the crane's cab, Salvador says he feels like "I'm sitting on top of the world."

HERE'S WHAT IT looks like atop the 212-foot mini-tower crane erecting the 15-story Chestnut Place residential development on Dennis F. Ryan Parkway across from the Quincy District Court House. In the foreground is the West of Chestnut apartment buildings and on the right is the Granite Trust Building at the corner 1400 Hancock St. and across the street the Stop & Shop office building. Off in the distance to the left can be seen part of the HighPoint residential community on Quarry Street.

Pretty close to it, as the photos he's taken from high above Quincy at the job site would attest.

He emailed The Sun a few pictures that appear with this story to give readers an idea what the views from atop Chestnut Place will offer.

O'Connell said Chestnut Place will feature 140 units — 10 per floor. Units will be one and two-bedrooms. The ground level will be retail space and include perhaps a branch bank.

Rents will average about $3,000 per month and include parking for one car per unit in the new garage being built in the adjacent area.

The "skin" of the building is expected to begin being installed sometime in September. O'Connell said a topping-off ceremony will be held sometime in November and the building should be ready for occupancy next August.

"The contractors are very professional and I'm very pleased about the progress being made. It's coming along very nicely," O'Connell said.

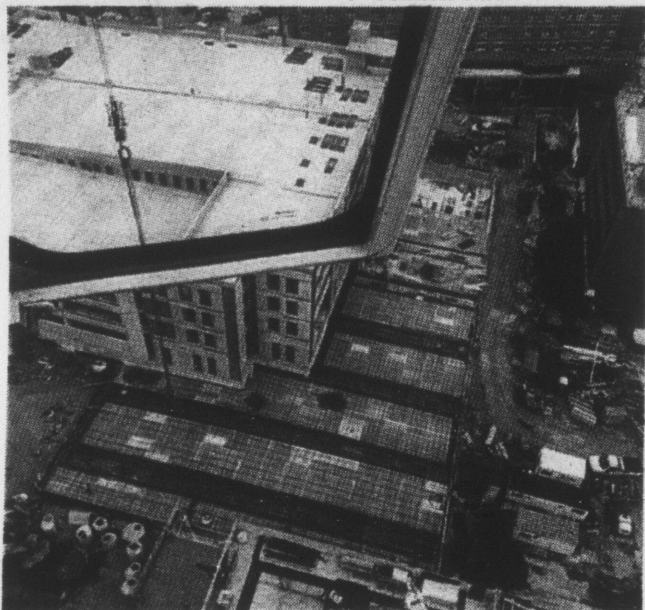

PHOTO TAKEN from the 212-foot mini-tower crane cab gives a birds-eye view of the construction area for Chestnut Place. At the top left corner is the new municipal parking garage scheduled to open this fall.

ANOTHER VIEW from atop the 212-foot mini-tower crane erecting the 15-story Chestnut Place residential development shows the area of Foster Street, Chestnut Street and Hancock Street. Among the landmarks visible is the dome of United First Parish Church, Presidents Place and the Coddington Building and off in the distance the Boston skyline.
